Pharmaceutical Prices with Insurance Coverage and Formularies

Anis, Aslam H.

Canadian Journal of Economics v25n2 PP: 420-437 May 1992 ISSN:

0008-4085 JRNL CODE: CJE

WORD COUNT: 9074

ABSTRACT: The success of formulary pricing is assessed. Formulary pricing is a price-tendering system used to generate competition among drug suppliers. The analysis develops a model of pricing in an uncertain auction from the point of view of a typical firm. The ability to make side-payments in the form of kickbacks to pharmacists segments the transaction into 2 stages. Within the context of the model, it appears that the spread-pricing hypothesis is correct when tested with data from Nova Scotia. It is found that mark-ups existed in the formulary prior to Nova Scotia's switch to actual acquisition cost (AAC) pricing in July 1986 and were larger when there was only one generic firm. It also seems that having more generics does not necessarily lead to lower bids, as the model would suggest. The empirical analysis found that 2 generics seem to be the best number as far as lower bids are concerned in the short-run period, whereas in the long run the model's prediction also holds for 3 or more generic firms.

The agonies of Air Wisconsin

Moorman, Robert W

Air Transport World v30n3 PP: 56-59 Mar 1993 ISSN: 0002-2543

JRNL CODE: ATW

WORD COUNT: 2724

ABSTRACT: Air Wisconsin went from profits of $18 million in 1988 to losses of $31 million in 1992 and is losing nearly $1 million weekly. United Airlines Corp. acquired Air Wisconsin after a bitter bidding war over Air Wisconsin's slots at O'Hare Airport, the value of which far exceeded the airline's assets and $150 million of long-term debt combined. United assisted with fuel purchases and assumed some of Air Wisconsin's accounting functions. Many believe United contributed to Air Wisconsin's financial woes long before the merger. In June 1986, the 2 carriers signed a code-sharing agreement that made Air Wisconsin a feeder for United, with the major carrier taking routes once they became profitable. However, Preston Wilbourne, Air Wisconsin's leader for nearly all its 25 years, is blamed by some for the airline's troubles. Still, some of Air Wisconsin's problems were neither its fault nor United's - the US recession, price wars, and an increase in fuel prices could not be foreseen.

RECORD TYPE: FULLTEXT; ABSTRACT

WORD COUNT: 2951 LINE COUNT: 00227

ABSTRACT: Air Wisconsin Inc's bankruptcy can be traced to poor aircraft purchases and United Airlines Inc's acquisition of the regional airliner. The regional carrier lost $31 million in 1992 after having posted profits of $18 million in 1988. United purchased Air Wisconsin to acquire the regional airline's jet slots at Chicago-O'Hare International Airport and to block American Airlines Inc from expanding its market at O'Hare. Air Wisconsin also hurt itself by entering into contracts with British Aerospace PLC to lease aircraft with known high operating costs.
